Year 7 Drama Class

Students at the Bridgetown High School who are in year seven get to experience technology and arts subjects in different contexts. They do a full term in their choice of an optional subject. They can choose from photography, wood work, metal work, music visual arts, home economics, digital technology or they can do one term in Drama.

The students in the drama class are taught by Meegan Cullen, who relates the students' curriculum like this:

“Over the term the students learn the basic skills needed to put on a live show and the term culminates in a performance of a live show in front of an audience which is made up of their parents and others.

“The students develop the play, they work in a collaborative situation in presenting and performing the play and of course they get to deal with the ‘the show must go on’ approach when things don’t go to plan, when lines are missed, set don’t work, all the things that can go wrong or may go wrong they able to deal with it.

“Not all the students wish to act on the stage, but there are stage production jobs such as lighting, sound, makeup and set design to take on.”

Drama students all bring different abilities and likes to the class,

Emily likes dressing up and acting up in a place where it is accepted.

Ava likes comedy, she loves being funny.

Jack loves drama, he did drama last year, the play his class performed was a short play called ‘Servant’s Roast’.

Cameron simply loves playing different roles, he can play the part of a villain and then be himself again.

Cameron also acted in the ‘Servant’s Roast’. In the play servants served food to the ‘well to do’ society members, but the food has been laced with a potion turning the ‘upper circle’ into pigs. Yes the parents were impressed. Read More in Current issue
